Editorial Policy

In 1999, Casio began to publish its Environmental Report. The report underwent a title change to the Sustainability Report last year (2004) as the report contents were revised to encompass social and economic activities, as well as environmental conservation programs. This year (2005), the title of the report has been changed once again to the CSR Report. The new report provides greater information and contains expanded environmental performance data. It also articulates Casio's social responsibilities to its diverse groups of stakeholders, which consist of its customers, business partners, investors and shareholders, and employees, as well as communities, citizens and the international society.

- The report was designed to be read by all stakeholders.* We made special efforts to use descriptions and expressions that are clear to any reader so that our customers at large who patronize our products and our employees feel inclined to read it.
- As much as possible, graphs and charts used in this report were designed to be barrier free to people who have vision perception peculiarities.
- On the back cover are additional contact information and Casio's Website URL to facilitate two-way communication with our readers.

Scope of the Report

●Reporting Period

This CSR Report 2005 summarizes mainly the CSR activities of the Casio Group in the 2004 fiscal year (from April 1, 2004 to March 31, 2005). However, parts of the Report contain information that precedes April 2004.

To Continue to be a Corporation Counted on and Trusted by All Stakeholders.*

Casio's foundation originates in the invention of the first relay-type calculator in the world 1957, a goal that had been set by the Kashio brothers in the days when only European- and American-style mechanical calculators were available. This invention, which became the basis of digital products and underwent numerous technological innovations, has contributed to wide-ranging office efficiency improvement in the business world since the years of steep economic growth in Japan. Furthermore, it bore fruit in the form of a variety of new digital products to hit the global market, helping Japan become the nation buoyed by electronics along the way. The progress attests to the solidity of the legacy left by Toshio Kashio, the company founder - his unwavering belief in "Creativity and Contribution." It is also the history of Casio that has met the challenge of each period and the society by putting to practice the credo of "contribution to the society through creation of innovative products."

Today, sustainable growth of the society is called for while questions are raised of corporations' social responsibility.

Casio recognizes that its primary duty is to make contributions to the society through creation of innovative products while using as the pillar of spiritual support this founder's belief, which continues to be at the base of the common commitment of conduct for our employees and our corporate culture. At the same time, we continuously ask ourselves how we might best fulfill out duties to our stakeholders and endeavor to reach our goals.
